Historic Name:
Date: ca. 1830
Architect/Builder: E.H. Glidden, arch.
Style (if appropriate):

Description: The original facade has been altered several times. The flemish bond of the original exterior is still visible, though painted, on the second and third stories. The marble steps also remain, but the rest of the features are later alterations. The storefront is framed by stone pilasters with geometric capitals and is painted black. The first floor restaurant and raised basement shop have modern plate glass windows. The entablature of the framing supports an oriel window on the second floor with a small console bracket underneath. The flanking window and the third floor window of the same bay have hoods with small brackets and dentil moldings. All other windows have flat arches. The sash of the upper stories is 1/1. The original cornice has been removed and replaced by a plain fascia panel under a mid-20th century cornice molding.

Significance:

Area: architecture

Level: local

Although its facade is much altered, the building has several elements of late 19th and early 20th century architecture. The three-sided oriel and the window hoods survive from the late 19th century. The geometric classicism of the storefront frame may be the work of E.H. Glidden, who was to have designed a new storefront in late 1901. For much of the mid-19th century, the house was the residence of William Woodville, auditor of the B & O Railroad in the early 1830's and later principal partner of William Woodville and Son, stockbrokers.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This masonry building is three stories high and three bays wide. The flat-arched entrance way on the left of the first story is flanked by flat pilasters, whose dentiled blocks support a blank entablature and cornice, which span the width of the building.

To the right of the door is a store window containing three pieces of plate glass. Beneath this is a basement which contains a door with a one piece transom. To its right is a large plate glass window.

In the left bay of the second story is a double hung, one-over-one window with a stone sill and a bracketed, moulded, flat-arched lintel. The other two bays are occupied by a bay window containing a large plate glass window in the center, and two narrower plate glass windows, one on either side. One large bracket beneath the center of the bay window acts as a support.

Third story windows are the same as the second story's left bay window, but only the left bay window has the same lintel (the other two have no lintels). Above these windows is a string course, and above this is the roof cornice.
